Latest fund report

In September, Danske Invest Hedge Fixed Income Relative Value posted delivered a return of minus 3,01%, bringing the year-to-date return to 3.36%.

September, and particularly the last week of the month, was a very volatile period in global fixed income markets. 30-year yields in both US, UK and France edged higher to levels not seen in decades. Especially France came under pressure with yield spread to Germany widening to levels not seen since the Euro Debt Crisis in 2011 and 2012. While public debt levels have been increasing for years in the previously mentioned countries the higher yield levels is putting further pressure on deficit levels. That being said, the moves in September seem to have been fueled further by stops from hedge funds with positions in France. We expect elevated volatility to continue in the near term. The elevated volatility often implies attractive opportunities across fixed income markets.

Geopolitical uncertainty remains exceptionally high. In the Middle East, tensions escalated on 28 February 2026, when the United States launched strikes against Iran. The situation remains fragile, and Iran and the United States are still negotiating a permanent agreement.

The Russia-Ukraine war continues to draw significant attention amid ongoing attacks and limited progress in peace negotiations. Other areas of tension are also in focus, including the conflict in Gaza, strained relations between the United States and China over Taiwan, and political developments within the United States.

Looking ahead, we continue to see attractive opportunities, although meeting our annual target of the risk-free rate plus 4-6% will be challenging. Nevertheless, market volatility remains elevated, and conditions could change significantly during the final three months of the year.

At the end of September, the portfolio?s risk level, measured as Value-at-Risk (1 week, 95%), was approximately 45% below our maximum risk limit. Overall, this indicates that risk has been more or less unchanged since the beginning of the month.

Please note that historical returns are not a reliable indicator of future returns. Additionally, monthly returns expressed in percentage terms are non-additive.
